Not Guilty of Murder.

In the Common Pleas Court at St. Clairsville Saturday in the case of Adam Jenkins, of Bellaire, indicted for the murder of Joseph Nicholls, at the house of afriend on Gravel Hill, about midnight of May 12 last, the jury returned a verdict of not guilty. There was a large audience present in the court room, many of those present being Bellaire men, and the announcement of the determination reached by the jury was received with loud applause, which it required some trouble on the part of Judge Driggs to check. The jury took the ground that the shooting was in self-defense.

Friends of Jenkins were congratulating him Saturday night after he returned to Bellaire. He sent several telegrams to friends and relatives living away from there telling them of his release.

vein and given a few indefinite pointers. The find is said to be located on the farm of a man named White, situated right near the Pennsylvania line, within a short distance of West Alexander. The reporter was told that a company had been formed to work the lode, pocket or whatever it may be, for all that was in it, the expectation being that there is a rich thing in it, and that within ninety days an ore crusher or graiding mill would be erected and in operation.

The specimens that were shown were in color as dark as slate, with fine light gay lines running through them. They were soft, resembling soapstone, and could be broken with the fingers. There is said to be a large quantity of this stuff in sight, and how much more there may be developed after the company gets to work no one can tell. By many of those who have looked into the mriter, it is believed that the vein extends over into Washington county, already famous for her many natural resources. Several assays have been made of the ore found on the White farm, and the results show from $40 to $70 per ton. If this holds out there is already enough of the ore in sight to justify the gentlemen interested, in risking their money with the probability of a handsome return in their favor.

The company received its own price for the equipment and franchise of the ser-vice, and, I think, made agood bargain."

In reply to a question as to whether or not this service was profitable, Mr.

stant contract with the traveling pouncy, and, as a matter of course, exert their influence in directing partonage to the roads over which the cars of the Pullman Company run."

Then in reference to a remark that the change in view of this fact would be an advantage to the B, & O., he answered: "Undoubtedly it will. The Pullman Company has done more to free railway travel of its disagreeable features than have all railway companies proper put together. That company has brought its service to a degree of perfection which no other has attained. It has a prestige gained by superiority of service which will be shared in by us. And in addition we will get the benefit of all the latest and best inventions which that company introduces. The progress which has already been made in the introduction of the new system is evidence that before many years it will entirely replace the present system. The Pullmans are changing all their ears a feat as rossible to the vestisystem. The Pullmans are changing an their cars as fast as possible to the vestibule style. The West particularly is clamorous for the new system, as the newspapers of that region show.
